

20 years—20 years based on one's Zip code. That is unconscionable.

To tackle health inequity, we must understand its underlying causes. I am proud of the work that the National Institutes of Health—NIH—based in Maryland, and NIH's National Institute for Minority Health and Health Disparities—NIMHD—are doing to advance the field of scientific research into health disparities. The evidence-based research that NIMHD invests in at institutions throughout the country is expanding the scientific knowledge base and informing practice and policy to reduce health disparities. Some recent work of NIMHD has focused on the prevention, treatment, and management of comorbid chronic diseases, as well as COVID-19 vaccine hesitancy within communities of color.

COVID-19 has disproportionately affected communities of color, particularly African-Americans, Hispanic Americans, and American Indian or Alaska Native people, who are at an increased risk of getting sick, having more severe illness, and dying from COVID-19. This is why I have fought for additional outreach and better data to close this gap. As part of that effort, Senator MENENDEZ and I introduced our legislation, the COVID-19 Health Disparities Action Act, which would support targeted and culturally competent public awareness campaigns about COVID-19 vaccines and preventive measures such as masking and social distancing.

I am glad to see NIMHD also targeting these issues through the theme of this year's National Minority Health Month, "Give Your Community a Boost!" which focuses on the continued importance of COVID-19 vaccination, including boosters, as one of the most effective ways to protect communities from COVID-19.

Accessible and affordable health coverage is key to addressing health inequities. I was proud to help pass the Affordable Care Act—ACA—which expanded health coverage to millions of Americans across the country. The American Rescue Plan built on the success of the ACA and expanded care to an additional 5.8 million Americans including 181,000 Marylanders.

I look forward to continuing to work with my colleagues to build on this progress.

As we recognize April as National Minority Health Month, let us recommit ourselves to ensuring all Americans have access to affordable, high-quality healthcare and renew our pledge to do everything possible to eliminate health disparities and ultimately achieve health equity for all.
